Yes, only engineering parents would take their one year old to a plant tour. On Wednesday evening, we had a RPI alumni event at Reed's Ginger Brew and since we haven't been able to find a teenage babysitter, we took Elizabeth with us. I am the president of the chapter, so I decided it would be ok (LOL) Well, as a matter a fact, Elizabeth wasn't the only child at the event. I was relieved (although she was the youngest). She actually had a good time playing with different size plastic cups and arranging them on the top of the coolers (who knew, I couldn't have spent money on all those expensive toys). Once it was time to go on the plant tour...we ask if Elizabeth could go in and the owner said yes, so she did, hairnet and everything. She didn't even try to take the hairnet off. I think she looked around and felt part of the group...it was so funny! Now that she knows all about product manufacturing, we think we might get her a part time job with Cargill (daddy's company...just kidding!). <http://www.reedsgingerbrew.com/home.asp>

If you like Ginger Ale, you have to try Reed's (plus the owner is an RPI alum). Even if you don't like Ginger Ale, try it...it's delicious. Unlike any other Ginger Ale you've tried before...all natural ingredients (and no, I didn't get paid to say this, haha)
